About the Author Lindsay Furber Although born in the Midwest, Lindsay Furber has lived in Washington State most of her life, prompting a love of the ocean at an early age. She recalls hours spent beachcombing along the seashore, and even now finds water a soothing place to relax. Her sea glass jewelry has been featured in several publications, including Coastal Living magazine and the Seattle Times, and is sold in more than 50 stores around the world. When not partaking of the sea glass world, Lindsay treasures time in the garden with her young son and an exuberant mutt. She also delights in exploring the world around her through photography. Mary Beth Beuke is a native of the Pacific coast who spent much of her childhood beachcombing. She is the owner of West Coast Sea Glass, specializing in jewelry made of genuine, handpicked, high quality sea glass from all over the world. Recently featured on The Travel Channel, and in National Geographic and Coastal Living magazine, Beuke was president of the North American Sea Glass Assoc. from 2006-2010. She works out of two studios along Washington State's Puget Sound. She sells her creations in over 40 galleries and shows. She can be found at westcoastseaglass.com. She lives in Sequim, WA.
